

But we are doing the best we can. That is a major amendment and will take some time. We would certainly like to get to that amendment as soon as we can. The key thing is to dispose of the so-called Chafee amendment as soon as we can.

THE BUDGET

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, shortly, the Congressional Budget Office—that is the official professional staff that has been in existence for many years that helps the Congress with budgeting—is going to issue—it is already prepared, it is ready for a formal issuance—an analysis of the President's budgetary proposals for the year 1999.

Before I tell the Senate what they are going to conclude, let me hearken back to when the President issued his budget. There were many Senators who asked me, "How can the President have so many new domestic programs when we have an agreed-upon limit for the year 1999 and the year 2000 and the year 2001, all the way to the year 2003, that doesn't permit any growth in the Federal domestic program?" As a matter of fact, to be accurate, it permits .5 percent growth, which the Congressional Budget Office has said, doing the arithmetic, it is even high; you cannot grow that much.

So I was being asked: Where can the President find money for his education initiative—whether you are for it or against it—for his child care proposal—whether you are for it or against it—and a long shopping list of programs? And I believe I said then, and said on the floor of the Senate, I do not believe he can. I believe he has tried to find a way to spend more than the agreement says we can spend, but says he isn't by transferring revenues and receipts to the Appropriations Committee so they can spend the money and take credit for the revenues and receipts and other matters like that.

Well, as a matter of fact, the Congressional Budget Office says that the President is $68 billion in excess of the agreed-upon amounts we can spend for each of these 5 years—$68 billion over the budget agreement caps on the domestic discretionary programs, on the domestic program part of the appropriations process.

Now, that is very important, because to the extent that that is correct, then obviously, unless Senators want to go back and restrain and cut and eliminate domestic programs, they are clearly not going to be able to fund very much of the President's new domestic initiative list that was forthcoming and stated in his State of the Union address.

Now, frankly, I did not believe, as one who has worked on this for some time, that the President could exchange matters in that way, and what I said has now been vindicated by the professionals who do the work for the Congress. If you could do it that way, then obviously these agreed-upon caps would be meaningless, for all you would have to do is find revenues and receipts, and the Government could grow and grow in terms of the amount that we spend and still say that we are within the agreed-upon caps because you offset the receipts against the expenditures.

Apparently, the Congressional Budget Office said that is not possible and then found that some of the expenditures are going to spend out more than the President says. Now, that is interesting, because if you wonder where we are on surpluses, you know the President said we had a $220 billion surplus over 5 years. The Congressional Budget Office, in its report, says the surplus for the 5 years, Mr. President, will be less than half of that, it will be $108 billion—slightly less than one-half of what he predicted.

In addition to that fact, which should sober us up a bit, this professional evaluation done for us by an independent entity—not the economists who work for the President, and not the President's Office of Management and Budget, but an independent group—they also say that the budget, the way the President is spending it, goes out of kilter and that in the year 2000 we are in deficit again. In other words, we come out, have a little surplus—a little surplus—and then in 2000 we are in deficit again. We come out of it shortly afterwards. But it does put us in a very awkward position, as we speak of the accumulation of surpluses over time, to find that the numbers we are going to be forced to use are going to say there is no surplus in the year 2000.

Now, I wish that the President was right in his $220 billion surplus over 5 years. I wondered about it, especially with all the new spending. But I was today to some extent—some sober language enters our discussions now, a little sobering-up with reference to where we are. And, I will insert in the RECORD the Congressional Budget Office's analysis in toto for everyone to read.

One last comment. The Congressional Budget Office has modified the annual surpluses also substantially so that there are no significant surpluses in the early years—maybe 4, 5, 6, 7 billion dollars, but nothing significant.
